Q: How to use swipe to hide(close) UITabBarController as is shown in this tutorial? I'm new to iPhone developing. I found a neat tutorial here. Basically, there is a UITabBarController and each tab represents a UIView. Each UIView has a UIScrollView that shows its content. What makes this tutorial so neat is that we are able to swipe the content of the content view to close the tab. This is very neat, and I want to implement it in a similar fashion. I understand that UIScrollView's touch event is a delegate method, I also understand that you can add a UIScrollView to a UIView and bind its delegate to the UINavigationController that contains the UITabBarController. However, I do not understand how to use the scroll view's delegate method to implement the functionality as in the tutorial. I can't use the viewDidLoad method to set the UIScrollView's content size. The only thing I know to do is pass the UINavigationController that contains the UITabBarController to the viewDidLoad method:

What's new in Aircraft War: Tank Wars:

Monster Castle (abbreviated as MC) is a novel written by Chinese American author John Woo, released in 2009. It recounts the story of three friends who visit Japan to demolish one of the castles built in the 1930s by Japanese warlord

Hajime Shinno. They travel into the underground caverns of the nearby ancient ruin, and later find themselves in a fight against the monsters that dwell there. The novel explores themes of art vs. power, deception, and good vs. evil; Woo explored many of these themes in the film Hard Boiled, his only American film in which he was involved in writing and executive producing. Woo stated that "Monster Castle" is closer to his heart than any other work to date, as he lived a lot of time around Shinmoedani during his upbringing. Plot Ji Xiao (pronounced: SHEY-oxe) is an eager art student at a college in Japan. He is obsessed with his aunt, Nagiko (Pamela Campbell—Hyde Park on Hudson, 2001) since she is the only family he has in Japan. Pamela was a student at his college before, whose roommate was Helen, a girl who Ji loves. Helen died when a typhoon blew through the campus. Pamela left Japan after this incident and Ji has made a point of trying to contact her, both as a way to keep her alive in his mind and so he could let her know how he felt about her. Ji is also obsessed with his professor Koji, because Koji was the one who discovered him while he was painting in the ruins. Ji feels like he was stripped away from the world, and so he aspires to recreate that same feeling in his art. Ji and his friend Kanade (a young woman who appears to be in her twenties, but who is actually a preteen boy under a fake ID) visit the ruins, where they notice a pair of dinosaur heads looking in at them from a broken metal grate. After Kanade plays a light, Ji notices something moving, and Kanade admits that she and Ji are dreaming of entering the ruins. The three of them enter the dungeon, which was once home to an ancient shinnōkan, or iron castle, constructed during the Bunbō-ō-Jukai period. From 1938 to 1945, the shinnōkan was used as a prison and execution site by the Japanese. From hiding, the three discover that the monsters above them are
