Scraping the Mud and Playing in it Episode One Collection by Eyeho Scraped by Jegri In this episode, I'll talk about what I'm going to be doing with the Grave Scavenger in Season 1. Grave Scavenger and The Simulacrum System I'll also talk about the various methods we're using to power this new system. Patching in the New Content There's a lot of content that's coming along with the new content update. This includes new screenshots, models, sounds, animations, a new map, new loot, and a new rideable horse. I'll talk about what I'm doing to make sure we're comfortable and up-to-date when releasing new content. Credit List If you have any friends in the modding community, or friends who enjoy modding games, you may see some of your own name in the credits. I'd like to give a special thanks to all the people who contributed to the work done on the DLCs. You're the reason they got done. Extra Credit There are people in the comments that have suggested things that would really help this game to be more successful. I'll give the props to the people who mentioned those suggestions! But since I just added the new map, I won't be adding any of them in the near future. You can read more about them in the "Extra Credit" section at the bottom of this page. Big Thanks to The Steam Community I have had to look back at how many posts I have made on the steam forums over the years, and I'm reminded of how much time I've spent there over the years. The steam community has made many times what I have. I have enjoyed meeting new people and I thank them for the wonderful opportunities they have provided for me. Huge thanks to the Destructoid Staff for being so awesome and the reason I was able to get any of the jobs I did. You really are the best community around, so thanks to all of you for your support. Don't worry I'm not going anywhere. I'll be around to help make any future projects I work on. If you have any ideas you'd like to see come to life, feel free to reach out to me. Giveaways I am currently giving away a special modder's edition of The Simulacrum System when it launches on December 11. To enter, like my Facebook page or follow me on twitter. As pink coral and the black bristles on Philine aspersa (Nematopalan and Musto, 2011) at 63 μm (d) (SEM), scale bar = 20 μm , both showing the presence of a species-specific von Willebrand factor. Photo credit: Petra A.W. Maas. (PhysOrg.com) -- In a study published in the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences of the United States of America, researchers at the Smithsonian Tropical Research Institute in collaboration with colleagues at the National Museum of Natural History in Washington, DC, identified and named three new species of venomous caterpillars from the gigantic Bombus canadensis bumblebee orchard bee sub-species. The species are found in the Neotropics and range in size from 9 to 13 centimeters long. Although specific venom appears to be largely species-specific, the results of the research demonstrates for the first time that morphological differences present in the genus can be targeted by antivenin toxins when applied by venom specialists. Bombus canadensis is also known to use Boophilus spp. ticks (Acarina: Ixodidae) as hosts and the association between the African tsetse fly and this bee and microbial symbionts of their symbiotrophic pathogenic bacterium Rochalimaea. (Chandler et al., 2004) Three new species of caterpillar sting ants (Braconidae) were described by the same research team. Other new species were also described from islands of Southeast Asia-Melanesia. (Szabó-Felke et al., 2010) (PhysOrg.com) -- Ant venom is a collection of very complex molecules consisting of a wide range of pharmacologically active components such as anticholinesterases, other biochemicals, and pheromones. None of these components have been isolated yet and the venom is known to vary among closely related species, and between individuals of the same species. In the first analysis of venom from 10 ant species, researchers at the Smithsonian Tropical Research Institute found that the venom from bumblebees and honeybees (Apidae) is very similar to that of leaf-cutting ants. The findings, which suggest possible connections between bee venom and the

Asian and American ant venoms, are published in the Proceedings of the Royal Society B. A team of researchers surveyed three Neotropical regions to better understand the diversity of ants
