Vasoactive intestinal polypeptide (VIP) and noradrenaline (NA) activate transducer mechanisms in the cardiovascular system that lead to a variety of responses. These responses include vascular smooth muscle contraction, heart rate acceleration, increased blood pressure, renin secretion, an increase in cardiac contractility, hypoalgesia and inhibition of gastric acid secretion. All of these responses are manifested through receptor-G protein interactions and mobilization of intracellular second messengers. Recent studies with non-peptide agonists show that they can serve as specific pharmacological tools to define the receptor subtype through which they activate these responses. VIP, has been shown to bind with a high affinity to the rat atrial membrane preparation (KD = 0.3 nM), rat kidney cortex (KD = 0.6 nM) and bovine aorta (KD = 0.4 nM). We propose to examine the distribution and regulation of VIP receptors in brain and peripheral organs. We will also examine the distribution of the high affinity VIP receptor in the heart and examine the developmental
