Barney's a rather unpleasant and... read MORE this, the majority of Central Americans show higher values of TL and TAL in the DL~25~ condition, which may reflect a previous hypertrophy of the triceps surae. Several studies ([@B38], [@B39]) have shown that this muscle is an efficient predictor of in vivo jump height ([@B5], [@B38], [@B39], [@B46]), and that its hypertrophy is important for jump improvement ([@B47], [@B48]). In addition, the excitation of TPT with higher activation of TAL (e.g., by a 100% increase in the CL~50~) could increase the volume of the SR portion of the muscle ([@B49], [@B50]) and induce an increase in its contractile properties. In the long run, this could explain why TAL can increase jump heights in players that perform TPT activation in its static condition ([@B9], [@B13]). In addition, the shorter MTAL~50~ in jumpers does not necessarily indicate a hypertrophy of this muscle because the players may not have reached the plateau of muscle growth of this muscle in the young age group ([@B10], [@B51]). Such a hypothesis is supported by the fact that, in the current study, there was an increase in MTAL~50~ only after training interventions, because the LAGs of TAL~50~ and MTAL~50~ were equal in this phase, and no differences were observed in MTAL~50~ in the PL~50~. The longer MTAL~50~ and the lower LAGs of MTAL~50~ in the PL~50~ may indicate that the volume of MTAL~50~ reached a plateau in players who showed a greater increase in jumping height in the DL~25~ condition. The higher MTAL~50~ in jumpers is also important because it may indicate the activation of the TAL component of the PL~50~. In this sense, it has been shown that TAL activation mediates the jump performance during reactive agility or DJ in well-trained youth soccer players ([@B9], [@B13]). The current findings have significant practical implications for the

Invasion" was born from the idea of the "Full of Bacon" series. We wanted to make a game that was fun, funny and addictive for everyone. This was as easy as we could make the game! While the weapons could vary in style and design, we wanted it to have a retro style to match with the cartoony graphics. Brought by 'Bot, for 'Bot... Watch, Control and Play You are a bot. In some way, shape or form you're a player, you've been programmed to defend a city from a cyber attack. You have been set loose upon the alien infestation and you need to take them down. On the path to the victory, many challenges stand in your way. Today, they may be insects, but tomorrow, they might be robots, or cyborgs, or man-made machines. They could be lethal, or they could be cute and fluffy. Now this is a shooting game. -ThickerThanWater Gameplay Eclipsed - Graphics/Art - Replayability If you have read my list in the FAQ, you will know that the gameplay eclipsed everything else. And it should. Not a day went by where the gameplay didn't have something new for me to try. I get bored easily, so something new and fresh was a real treat for me. I've noticed that it's difficult to make a game fun over and over, but I don't feel that difficult here. It's not necessary for it to be difficult, but it would not have been as much fun. New gameplay is what keeps my interest when I play something. I don't care if it's easy to beat as long as I'm having fun while doing it. Replayability is another one of my top priorities when looking at game content. I don't know if you've ever read many game reviews or played enough games to know that, but the one game that I usually play and review for a site is almost always a favorite game of mine because of the replay value. It's the same with Greenlight games. If the gameplay has some replay value, I'll try to rate the game as such. I try not to add these myself, but many times they are the most fun and interesting parts of the games. No doubt, I'd love a game that was difficult to beat because it gave me lots of fun with a variety of gameplay and challenges along the way. Greenlight doesn't really cater to replayabilty with their Beta testing, but it's something that they should be more aware of as they grow their Steam storefront. You can't just slap a Beta tag on something and say that's what it is. What does that mean? It means that we're having so much fun that we want you to come along for the

!Will she/he disable her competition? Wish me luck, would really like a lot of help here! Does anyone have a manual on how to do this? I'd prefer to wait a bit and not do it right before a major tournament(not that I think it really matters though) as I'll be away on vacation the weekend it happens. Thanks, With that kind of time frame you can't realistically fiddle around with everything in detail on your own. You'll either need to find someone who is going to actually be there, or plan with a reputation manager. AraKnotBot!

I'd prefer to wait a bit and not do it right before a major tournament(not that I think it really matters though) as I'll be away on vacation the weekend it happens. Thanks, With that kind of time frame you can't realistically fiddle around with everything in detail on your own. You'll either need to find someone who is going to actually be there, or plan with a reputation manager. Your best bet is a reputation manager. If you want to avoid them take lessons, and learn/observe. They can help you understand what people are complaining about when rating you "high" or "low", and help you avoid reputation flips. Find a reputation manager you trust. Rep managers give you a large buffer so you can leave your server and check on things easily. When you do put up your deactivate your server and don't return to your main server for a while. One thing to keep in mind is if you want to put your server up and leave it again but don't want a 10-15 minute log out time you can turn on "Autonomous Reputation Management". This has a huge buffer so you don't have to sit there and wait for it to take effect. Once you turn that on it's basically your server checking on it's own so it's not necessary to sit there and monitor. In the meantime if you don't want to wait for a reputation manager you can go back into the server settings and increase your "buffer" to whatever it is that works for you in a short session. Sorry, interpopeendlesurfer and AraKnotBot!LOL!Haha, thank you both. Was hoping for
