Kannada Kannada: A regional language spoken in Karnataka, India. It is an official language of Karnataka, Kannada Republic of India, Sri Lanka and the South African Republic. Its speakers are called Kannadigas. Kannada is mostly written in the Kannada script, an abugida, which takes both Devanagari and Roman script as input, so it is sometimes called a digraphic script. It has two main syllabic phonemic orthographies, which used to be phased, and do not have consistent romanizations. The Kannada script was developed from the South Indian Brahmi script, which in turn derived from the Pāṇinian Brahmi script. It has been continuously used for writing the Kannada language since ancient times. The Kannada script is used to write the Kannada language both in Indian and world literature, much like the Latin script is used to write the Romance languages of the world. It is the script of choice for the regional language of Karnataka. The script is the official script for the state of Karnataka. Pronunciation Numerous Latin alphabets have existed throughout history, such as Medieval Latin, Classical Latin, and Modern Latin. Each of these Latin script alphabets is used to represent a different group of languages within the Latin language family. Kannada script as a language is not related to any of them. However, there is a correlation between Kannada script and the Hebrew script. Kannada does not have a defined standard Latin alphabet. The authors of the existing Kannada dictionaries, such as Kannada Sahitya and Kannada Sloka, have provided the transcription of the Kannada script into the Latin script. For example, Kannada Sloka (A Dictionary of Kannada) has the vocabulary in the Kannada script and the pronunciations in English and Telugu. It is a table format in which the Kannada letters and the phonetic spelling are listed on the left side. The pronunciation is followed by an English/Telugu word (e.g.), pronunciation, and pronunciation. The Kannada letters are in the top left row. The number of letters in the script is 74. Eighteen letters are present, with 7 vowels and 11 consonants. There are three broad groups,
