Supreme Court Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg canceled a previously scheduled appearance to speak at the University of North Carolina on Wednesday after she received a slew of nasty, racist and sexist comments from angry protesters. Ginsburg canceled her visit to the North Carolina law school (among other previously scheduled appearances) after police received an alarming number of threats and attacks against the justice, according to the Daily Caller. "The campus is under police protection and it is not appropriate to have her speak," Gaston County Police spokesman Lt. Rick Allen told the Washington Post. The intense vitriol directed against Ginsburg from the incel crowd and other far-right radicals has gone viral on social media and has even prompted the GOP to distance itself from some of the hateful comments that have been directed at the Supreme Court Justice.

The UNC-Chapel Hill received a slew of threats from the alt-right following the firing of White Supremacist professor William Jacobson for his "Trigger Warning" blog post asking the university to fire professor Richard Spencer after his graduation. A report from the Daily Caller highlights the incels' reaction to Ginsburg's cancellation of her visit. "Supreme Court Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg should be shot by a firing squad for her bias." This is a slogan frequently used by the incel crowd (who refer to themselves as "involuntary celibates") and typically posted on forums like 4chan. "We will put a bullet between her eyes," reads another. Do you think Ruth Bader Ginsburg is a threat to our nation? Yes No
